Eight people were killed on June 3, 2017, when terrorists drove a truck to pedestrians in London Bridge before launching a knife attack at Borough's market. The chair of the Assembly of London, Andrew Boff, said that "gets stronger every time he is tested" and that "the wonderful spirit of our city will always prevail", since the Assembly marked the anniversary of the attack. Mr. Boff was added: "In this day, four years ago, eight innocent people lost their lives during a terror attack on the London Bridge. Today, we remember them. Â € Â Â "The pain of Losing a loved one is not loved as time passes. Our thoughts are with their relatives and friends in this day. Previously, the mayor of London Sadiq Khan participated in a memorial service for the victims of the attack in the Southwark Cathedral, where he, along with the families of the victims and other figures, put flowers in memory. Mr. Khan said: "This cowardly attack sought to fracture our communities and destroy our way of life. It was not only an attack on London, but also an attack on the freedoms and values we attended dear Londoners. "Despite the loss of eight precious lives, the unwavering spirit of our city serves as a reminder for all those who would try to divide that they will never have success." The mayor of London has rendered homage to the victims of the terrorist attack of the London Bridge, saying that the thoughts of him "are with the And friends who lost loved ones ... and that they have to adapt to very different and difficult circumstances of this year. "People were murdered after three men led pedestrians on the bridge and then applied people. People. In a statement, Sadiq Khan said: The terrorist cowards who commit these terrible acts do so to try to divide ourselves and change the way we are dealing with. But we must be proud of the way our city has responded â € œtock, "remaining united. The Londoners will always see our diversity as one of our greatest strengths, and we will continue to honor the innocent victims, keeping us faithful to the values that unite us ».
