The key to success lies in simplicity - often, the simplest connections are the correct ones. When playing, it's essential to carefully weigh your guesses and not be trigger-happy, as you only have four chances per puzzle. To help, press the "Shuffle" button before solving the puzzle. If you're unsure, refer to our dedicated guide. The current categories for NYT Connections include Yellow (TV Display settings), Green (Fuzzy, as a memory), Blue (Results of some arithmetic), and Purple (Window treatments in the singular). To access past games, head to the archives and choose any date you prefer. The Purple category is often considered the hardest to solve. NYT Connections is free to play, and today's answers are listed below. NYT Connections: A Fun Puzzle Game for Brain-Boosting Fun The NYT Games puzzle "Connections" offers a fun and engaging experience to challenge your brain every day. The goal is to link four pairs of four words, which can be categorized by specific terms or be part of little world puzzles where words may come before or after each other. The difficulty level increases as you progress, and there's only one set of right answers. You have a limited number of tries, so it's essential to think strategically. The puzzle is divided into four colors - yellow, blue/green, and purple - with the latter being the most challenging. To play, choose four words that you think are linked, and if correct, you'll get a lit-up row showing your connection. If close, it will tell you you're one away from solving. With four mistakes, the puzzle ends. To access more puzzles or see answers without failing, consider getting an NYT Games subscription.
