What is grief??

Grief is the reaction we have in response to a death or a loss. It's also the name we give to process of coping with the loss of someone who has died. It is a very normal emotion.

Grief can affect our minds, bodies, emotions, and spirits. There is no right or wrong way to grieve. The grieving process takes time and grief can be more intense at times than others. Most people experience grief in waves that come and go. It's okay to feel grief for days, weeks, or even months. Every person and situation is different.

Feeling better usually happens gradually. At times, it might feel like you'll never recover. As time goes on, reminders of the person who has died can intensify feelings of grief. At other times, it might feel as if grief is in the background of your normal activities and not on your mind all of the time.

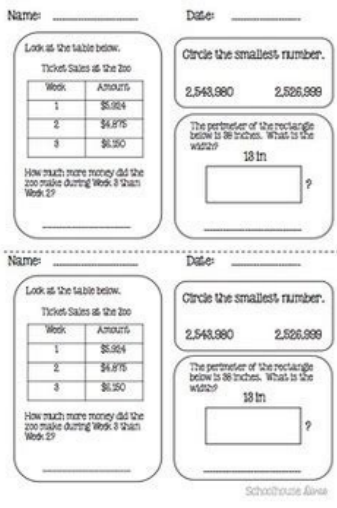

As do you things you enjoy and spend time with people you feel good around, you can help yourself feel better. Grief has its own pace. Every situation is different. How much grief you feel or how long it lasts isn't a measure of how important the person was to you.

Getting over grief does not mean forgetting about the person who died. Grieving is about finding ways to remember loved ones and adjust to life without them present.
