Python variable name e doesn't conform to snake_case naming style.

PYLINT recognizes a series of different types of name within a series of different types. With a few exceptions, the type of name is regulated by the place where the assignment is found to a name, and not by the type of object assigned. Type module name Description and package names, such as file names. Cons constant module-level, any variable defined at the module level that is not linked to a class object. Class names in class statements, as well as names related to class level objects. Functions, TOPLEVEL or nested in functions or methods. Method methods, features defined in class bodies. Includes static and class methods. Attributes created on class instances within methods. Topic Topics to any type of function, including lambds. Local variables in functions. Class-attribute attributes defined in class bodies. CLASS-CONST ENANS COSTANTS AND CLASS VARIABLE WHEEL WITH CLASVAR INLINEVAR LOOP Variables in list understandings and in the expressions of the generator. By default, Pylint will make the suggested PEP8 names apply. Pylint provides set of default denomination styles. These predefined denomination style can be used to adjust the pylint configuration to the coding style used in the Linted project. Following default denomination styles are available: Camelcase Camelcase Pascalcase Upper u Case Any - False Style that does not impose any limitation The following options are exposed -module-denominang-style = 194; A¶ - Const-denominang-STYLE = 1919191Stile; 1919191 >> Style>; 12121;
