Explosion reported outside us embassy in beijing

It is unclear whether that incident occurred. While Chinese officials and state media have been critical of the White House, there has been no groundswell of public anger towards the US. Within a few hours of the blast, police were ushering journalists away from the scene. China's capital city can overwhelm on a first visit—the streets seem that much wider, the population that much denser. The blast hurt his hand, authorities said. A probe into his motives is underway. The explosion happened about 1 p.m., multiple witnesses said. Liang Zhou, 21, said she was waiting to apply for a student visa when she heard a bang. Story continues below advertisement "It sounded like a gas tank exploded," said the woman in black Vans sneakers. News of the blast spread quickly on Chinese social media, attracting nearly 1m views before search terms related to the incident were blocked. A Chinese police car near the embassy appeared to have been damaged. Local police have not commented. With the U.S. school year around the corner, Chinese students are busy finishing up paperwork so they can start classes in the fall. Determined applicants Thursday said they were shaken but returned to stand in the 90-degree heat. Story continues below advertisement Liang, who is headed to California, said she needed her paperwork by Friday. "The explosion scared me," she said, "but this is my last day in Beijing." Luna Lin and Amber Ziyue Wang contributed to this report. This network of cramped alleyways is where you'll be woken by the sound of the knife sharpener starting his day at 6 a.m., just hours after the cocktail bars have cleared out. The bombing comes as China and the US are locked in a trade dispute. More than a hundred people stood outside, some unaware that a bomber had recently ignited a device less than 100 meters away. Story continues below advertisement Only a trail of blood remained on the sidewalk. Witnesses reported hearing the blast. A witness who only gave his surname, Li, said he was cleaning the road outside the nearby Japanese embassy at the time of the incident. Traffic was allowed to flow again and visa applicants were lining up outside the embassy. The state-run Global Times earlier reported that a woman spraying petrol on herself had been taken away from outside the US embassy on Thursday morning in what appeared to be a separate incident. Highlights for a stop include the Ullens Center for Contemporary Art, Magician Space gallery, Fei Space, Café Flatwhite for cup of coffee, and, if you're looking for a hip stay, the Yi-House Art Hotel 798. The Hutongs While the high-rise glamour of modern Beijing dominates the skyline, the hutongs are the lifeblood of the city. Photographs and videos posted online showed smoke near the embassy's eastern edge, as well as security personnel and police cars gathered near a nearby intersection. But less than an hour later, the scene was largely clear and the embassy was again open for business. Choose an elegant hotel stay at the Waldorf Astoria, the Opposite House, or the Shangri-La. BEIJING — A 26-year-old man detonated a homemade bomb outside the U.S. Embassy in Beijing on Thursday, injuring only himself and filling the air with smoke, police and witnesses said. The bomb, which officers said resembled a firecracker, exploded in a public area at the embassy's southeast corner, where people wait in line to apply for U.S. visas. Get the full experience. Choose your plan As the crowd scattered, police quickly apprehended the suspect, whom they identified as a man from Inner Mongolia with the last name Jiang. Take a tour of our favorite architecture in the city, including the Forbidden City, the Great Wall, the National Centre for the Performing Arts, Olympic venues like the "Bird's Nest" stadium and the National Aquatic Center, and Zaha Hadid's Galaxy Soho complex. The 798 Art District Beijing's 798 Art District has gone through a massive transformation—from a bustling industrial park to a hub of working artists' studios to a mecca of modern Chinese art and design. And see an extensive collection devoted to Chinese history at the National Museum of China. Here's what else to check out once you've seen the classics. Architecture. Supersize Everything in and around Beijing feels larger than life. Rauhala reported from Almaty, Kazakhstan. Today's coverage from Post correspondents around the world Like Washington Post World on Facebook and stay updated on foreign news A man has detonated a small, low-grade bomb outside the US embassy in Beijing, according to US and Chinese authorities, injuring himself but no one else. The explosion occurred at the south-east corner of the embassy compound, a heavily fortified structure in the north-east of the Chinese capital, at about 1pm local time (6am BST). Chinese police said in a statement that the suspect was a 26-year-old man who hurt his hand while setting off a "firecracker-like explosive". A US embassy spokesperson said: "According to the embassy's regional security officer, there was one individual who detonated a bomb. "I heard the sound of a big explosion and then women screaming," he said. She dashed away through the white smoke. Zhang Lisi, 47, was waiting outside for her son, a college junior who needed a visa to resume his studies in Riverside, Calif., when the bomb went off. She figured it was a car accident. "It sounded like a car tire had blown," Zhang said. Word of a blast near the embassy spread quickly on social media. Soak up all the energy with a stay at the Orchid, grab a bite at Temple Restaurant or Li Qun, a drink at Capital Spirits or Great Leap #6, and find something to take home with you at Lost and Found. Keep your eyes wide open, though, and you'll discover the city's rich heritage—and its future. Even its UNESCO-listed cultural sites sound daunting: the Forbidden City, the Great Wall. Police said he had been detained and taken to hospital. Onlookers crouched around the droplets, snapping photos on their phones. Police told reporters to leave. As rumors swirled Thursday, the Global Times, a Communist Party-controlled newspaper, reported there had been an attempted self-immolation at the same spot at 11:00 a.m., briefly creating confusion about what took place. Other than the bomber, no other people were injured, and there was no damage to embassy property. "Chinese police identified the suspect only by his surname, Jiang, and said he was from Tongliao, a city in China's Inner Mongolia region. They did not identify a motive. Videos and photos posted on social media earlier on Thursday showed smoke at a crossroads as groups of pedestrians gathered and police surrounded the area, which is home to several embassies. You can experience the city in one perfect weekend, or stretch your trip out to see everything the city has to offer.
